

THE CONSTITUTION

of the
REPUBLIC OF CYVATHON

Code. Conquer. Cause Creativity.

Founded 26 May 2025 · Adopted 11 September 2026
A nation is its people, not its ruler.

PREAMBLE

We, the citizens of the Republic of Cyvathon — a micronation founded on the twenty-sixth day of May in the year two thousand and twenty-five, built by its own citizens around code, creativity and community — do adopt this Constitution as the founding law of our Republic. We hold that a nation is its people and not its ruler. We hold that every office exists to serve the citizens who fill the treasury and cast the ballots. We hold that law is made in the open, argued in the open and recorded in the open. And we hold that nothing in Cyvathon is held by force, because everything in Cyvathon was joined by choice. Our motto is Code. Conquer. Cause Creativity. — and what we conquer is problems, never people.

ARTICLE I — THE REPUBLIC

§1. Name and founding

The nation is the Republic of Cyvathon. It was founded on 26 May 2025 and its website — the seat of its government and the ground on which its laws run — went live on 31 May 2025. Its motto is Code. Conquer. Cause Creativity.

§2. A nation of citizens

Cyvathon is its citizens. Its institutions — the Treasury, the Legislature, the Courts, the Cabinet and the public services — exist to serve them, and draw every power they hold from this Constitution and from the citizens' consent.

§3. Territory held by consent

The Republic's first true territory is Class 8E at The International School Bangalore, acceded by the Treaty of Anti-Anarchism on 2 September 2026 by the unanimous agreement of everyone in the class. It is held by invitation and by nothing else. The authority of the school, its teachers and its staff is absolute there and is in no way touched by this Constitution; any resident may withdraw their consent at any time and the territory may be released by the same unanimity that granted it. Conquest is neither claimed nor recognised, anywhere, ever.

§4. The states

Within the Republic's own world lie five states — Neonhaven, Cryptvale, Silica Plains, Portus Mare and Aetheris, the national capital and seat of the President. Each keeps its own marketplace and its own channel; citizens travel between them on a passport and settle where they choose.

ARTICLE II — CITIZENSHIP

§1. Admission

Any person may seek citizenship by registering with the Republic. New citizens are reviewed by the President before their first login, for one purpose only: to keep bad actors out. A fellow micronation may register as a foreign nation.

§2. The welcome grant

On admission every citizen receives one hundred (100) of each currency from the National Treasury. The grant is a gift to start with, not money to send away: it cannot be transferred out of the citizen's own accounts.

§3. Identity

Every citizen holds an Identity Card recording their designation, holdings and record. No citizen may falsify a record, impersonate another citizen, or hold themselves out as an office they do not fill.

§4. Equality

All citizens stand equal before the law and before every institution of the Republic, whatever their origin, rank, office, wealth or belief.

§5. The Oath of Allegiance

Any citizen may swear the Oath of Allegiance. Swearing it is entirely voluntary; no service, office or right is withheld from a citizen who has not sworn, save entry to the capital. Once sworn the Oath is binding, and may be renounced only by a written request on paper to the President.

ARTICLE III — RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

§1. Voice

Every citizen may speak, write, publish and broadcast — in the public square, in blogs, in video and in the press — subject only to the law of conduct, which forbids harassment, fraud and abuse and nothing else.

§2. Property and enterprise

Every citizen may earn, hold, save, invest, lend and spend money; found a company, take it public and trade its shares; and buy and sell in any market of the Republic. What a citizen has earned is theirs, and may be taken only by a judgment of the Court, by a tax laid down in law, or in settlement of a loan the citizen has not repaid (Article VIII §5).

§3. The ballot

Every citizen has one vote in every election and one vote on every bill, cast once and final. Every citizen may stand for any vacant ministry, unless they are serving a sentence, carry a conviction on their record, or still owe a loan. For the Chancellor and the Judge the President convenes the vote and names the candidates on the ballot; the citizens choose between them.

§4. The law

Every citizen may table a bill before the Legislature, may bring a case before the Court, may report a crime, and is entitled to be heard before the Court gives any judgment against them. No citizen may be judged by a person who is a party to their case.

§5. Belief

Chairism is the valued culture of the Republic and is honoured by it. It is never compelled. No citizen is taxed, fined, ranked, or disadvantaged in any way for declining to practise it.

§6. Openness

The Treasury's holdings, the Gazette, the record of every Act and decree, the National Timeline, the proceedings of the Legislature and the Court, and every citizen's public record are open to every citizen to read.

ARTICLE IV — THE PRESIDENT

§1. Office

The President is Head of State. The office is held by the founder of the Republic, Prathyay. Once every six years a national vote, which the President is bound to convene, is held in which the citizens elect or confirm the President.

§2. Powers

The President: administers the National Treasury and sets the national levers of the economy; gives or withholds assent to bills passed by the Legislature; issues decrees within the law; names the Vice President; convenes national votes for the Chancellor and the Judge and names the candidates, and may name a Chancellor to serve until the citizens elect one; may appoint a citizen to a ministry, or dismiss a minister; reviews new citizens and approves couriers; confirms alliances with other nations; may sit in the Court, and sits alone when no Judge is elected; may detain a citizen by order, for a stated reason and a stated term; may release or pardon a citizen; and keeps the National Timeline. This list is complete: a power not written here is not held.

§3. Limits

The President is bound by this Constitution. A decree may not repeal an Act of the Legislature, override a judgment of the Court, or amend this Constitution. The President may not rule on a case to which they are a party. A detention by presidential order may not exceed three hundred and sixty-five (365) days, is entered on the citizen's public record with its reason on the day it is made, and counts as a conviction; it is the one judgment given without a hearing in the Republic, and this Article names it so that no citizen is surprised by it. Every decree, assent, appointment, detention and pardon is entered in the public record.

§4. No salary

The President draws no salary. The Treasury is held for the nation and spent on it, and the person who holds it takes nothing from it.

§5. The Vice President

The Vice President is named by the President and stands beside them, deputising at the President's request and in their absence from the ceremonies of state. The office carries none of the President's powers by right.

ARTICLE V — THE CABINET AND THE MINISTRIES

§1. The Chancellor

The Chancellor leads the Cabinet. The office is filled by national vote, which the President convenes; until one is held, the President may name a Chancellor.

§2. Ministries

Ministries are created by law and run their departments on budgets drawn from the Treasury. A ministry's brief follows its name: Defence, Finance, Transport & Logistics, and Justice & Home Affairs, with such further offices — the Security Minister, the Head of Coding, the Head of Hacking — as the Republic keeps.

§3. How ministers are chosen

A vacant ministry is filled by election: any eligible citizen may stand, and when four have done so an election opens of its own accord and every citizen votes. The President may also appoint a citizen to a ministry, and may dismiss a minister; an appointment is entered on the citizen's record.

§4. Duties held outright

A minister's duties are theirs to carry out without asking: the Defence Minister works the Armoury desk; the Transport Minister vets and approves the couriers of Cyvazon; the Justice Minister rules on Cyvashield claims.

§5. Policy by proposal

A minister who would move a national lever — a tax rate, the courier wage, the Armoury rate, a levy — proposes it. Nothing changes until the President assents, and the proposal and its answer are both recorded.

ARTICLE VI — THE LEGISLATURE

§1. Who makes law

Law is made by the citizens. Any citizen may table a bill; every citizen may debate it and vote on it; the sponsor may withdraw it.

§2. Passage

A bill that receives more Ayes than Nays passes and goes to the President for assent. On assent it is enacted, numbered as an Act of the year, and published in the Gazette. A bill refused assent does not become law, and is marked refused on the Legislature's roll.

§3. The Gazette

The Gazette is the Republic's record of law: every Act and every decree, numbered in order and open to all. What is not in the Gazette is not the law.

ARTICLE VII — THE COURTS AND JUSTICE

§1. The National Court

The National Court hears every case a citizen brings. The elected Judge presides. The President may also sit, and sits alone when no Judge holds office. No one may rule on a case to which they are a party.

§2. A fair hearing

Both sides of a case may argue it before judgment. A citizen may report a crime with evidence, and the report is heard in the same way.

§3. Sentences

A sentence of the Court is a fine, a term in jail, or both. No term of jail — whether given by the Court or by presidential order under Article IV — may exceed three hundred and sixty-five (365) days. A jailed citizen is confined to the jail until the term is served, and is released when it is. Convictions, including a detention by order, are entered on the criminal record and bar the citizen from standing for office.

§4. Mercy

The President may pardon any conviction. A pardon is recorded like any other act of the office.

ARTICLE VIII — THE TREASURY AND THE ECONOMY

§1. One Treasury, in the open

There is a single National Treasury into which all taxes, levies, fees and forfeitures flow and from which every salary and public service is paid. Its holdings are published, and every citizen may read them at any time.

§2. Currency

The lawful currencies are the Cybuck (CB), the Crystalline (CRY) and the Cybit (CBT), pegged at one Cybuck to one Crystalline and fifty Cybits. Cybits are the change of a Cybuck. The Crystalline is shared with our ally Crystonia. The Pufferbuck and the Aquiline were withdrawn in September 2026, and every holding of them was turned into Crystallines at full value.

§3. Taxation

A Value-Added Tax is levied monthly on every citizen's holdings, at a rate set by law and published — ten percent (10%) at the adoption of this Constitution — together with the delivery levy that keeps Cyvazon free. Cyvashield cover is free; the Republic may set an insurance levy only if payouts outrun revenue, and must publish it. No tax may be laid on a citizen for what they believe.

§4. Salaries

Salaries are paid weekly from the Treasury by office: the Vice President and the Chancellor 1,000 CB; a Minister, the Security Minister and the Judge 900; the Head of Coding, the Head of Hacking and a company Founder 800; an Employee 500; a Citizen 100. Couriers of Cyvazon draw 500 CB besides. The President draws nothing.

§5. Credit

A citizen may borrow up to five thousand (5,000) Cybucks from the Treasury, to be repaid within thirty (30) days. Borrowed money may not be sent away. A loan not repaid by the end of its term is called in: the Treasury takes the citizen's Cybucks and Crystallines in settlement — the whole of them, not only the sum owed — and the default is entered on the record. This is the hardest rule in the Republic and it is written here so that no one borrows without knowing it. While a loan is still owed a citizen may not stand for office; once it is repaid or called in, they may.

ARTICLE IX — THE PUBLIC SERVICES

§1. Cyvazon

Delivery anywhere in the territory is free to whoever asks for it, paid for by the delivery levy. Couriers carry other citizens' property and are therefore approved before they carry anything; only the person receiving a parcel may confirm that it arrived.

§2. Cyvashield

Every citizen may take free cover against theft, lost parcels, bad trades and scams. Claims are checked against the record and ruled on openly.

§3. Cyvalend

Citizens lend one another the things they forgot, free of charge — though an owner may ask a returnable deposit, given back when the item comes home — and give them back on time.

§4. The Armoury

The Republic keeps a defensive Armoury. A citizen who hands in a G2 pen is paid the war-effort rate by the Defence desk, and every round is logged.

§5. Cyvapay and the markets

Any of the Republic's currencies may be taken as payment on any website through Cyvapay, and goods traded in the national and state marketplaces and the card packets. Every sale raises a delivery so that nobody may take the money and keep the goods.

ARTICLE X — DEFENCE AND FOREIGN RELATIONS

§1. Doctrine

The doctrine of the Republic is defence, not invasion. Cyvathon's forces exist to defend it. No office of the Republic may order an attack on another nation, its citizens or its servers, and none has.

§2. Athena and the Registry

The intelligence service and the classified Registry serve the Republic's defence and its knowledge of the world, within the doctrine above and within the law. Both answer to the President, and nothing held in the Registry may be used against a citizen except in the open, before the Court.

§3. Treaties

The Republic keeps its word. It signed a Treaty of Peace, Friendship and Free Trade with the Republic of Crystonia on 14 June 2026, and the Treaty of Anti-Anarchism on 2 September 2026. Alliances are requested by nations and confirmed by the President; the Republic may also name a rival, and a rival is watched, never attacked. Every treaty is entered in the National Timeline.

ARTICLE XI — CULTURE

§1. Chairism

Chairism is the valued culture of the Republic. We honour the prophets of the Chair, and those who wish to say so may say it: all hail the Chair. It is a cultural practice, freely encouraged and freely declined, as Article III provides.

§2. The record

The National Timeline is the Republic's memory. Its founding entries are fixed; everything since is written by the citizens who live it.

ARTICLE XII — AMENDMENT AND SUPREMACY

§1. Amendment

This Constitution is amended by an Act of the Legislature — a bill tabled by a citizen, passed with more Ayes than Nays, and given assent — and by nothing else. No decree may amend it.

§2. Supremacy

This Constitution is the highest law of the Republic. A decree, an Act or a ruling that conflicts with it is void to the extent of the conflict.

§3. Practice and principle

The Republic's law is exercised through its national website. Where a feature of the website and a clause of this Constitution do not yet match, the clause states the principle the Republic holds itself to, and the feature is to be brought into line with it.

Adopted by the Republic of Cyvathon on 11 September 2026, in place of the Constitution and Lawbook of 2025, and in force from that day.
